1. [redacted] ship visited the port of Igarka (N 67-28, E 86-35) [redacted] spoke with [redacted] On the trip to Igarka, [redacted] the Kara Sea pilot assigned to his ship. [redacted] he had served as a lieutenant on a submarine for a short time, and that at the present time he was the first mate aboard a [redacted] Soviet merchant ship. [redacted] [redacted] and it did not have any [redacted]

The vessel was between 8,000 and 9,000 DWT, and it did not have any masts, only cranes. [redacted] the ship plied between the Far East and Eastern Europe. The pilot said that the ship was undergoing a complete overhaul in Leningrad, and that in the meantime he was serving as a Kara Sea pilot.

2. [redacted] the pilot criticised the state of affairs in the Soviet Union, especially the high prices, the lack of consumer goods, and the quality of the goods available, most of which were not up to standard. The pilot spoke very frankly, and he said that it was possible to speak out and conduct oneself quite freely in the USSR in one's daily life as long as nothing was done which could be construed as agitation against Communism.

3. There was an airfield on the island opposite Igarka, [redacted] Twin-engined passenger aircraft landed and departed from the airfield daily. A short distance southwest of the quay [redacted] three or four Catalina-type aircraft which were moored to buoys in the river. [redacted]
